The fantasy series of Harry Potter by J. K. Rowling comes to a great end with the final book Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows. I started reading this book because I wanted to know how the series ended.

Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows is about the three main characters, Harry, Ron, and Hermione setting out to find and destroy horcruxes (objects that contain parts of your soul and make the user near immortal) while being chased down and searched for by the single most dangerous wizard in the world, and his followers. Along the way they face problems that they expected and problems that they had never dreamed of. Harry had wanted to go on this journey alone but his best friends wouldn't let him without them coming along with him. Their departure was unexpected and sudden when Ron's brother's wedding got majorly interrupted. They went into hiding and moved location every couple days. Without any information on how the others were doing, carried on with the original plan. Sometimes their friendship became unstable due to the lack of food or gloomy mood, and one time it almost split apart. Ron left them and regretted it instantly, but couldn't get back to them for months. The story ends in a great battle with lots of tragic losses and triumphant success which leaves the reader torn of which one is more powerful, it shows that you can never win a war.

The main character, Harry Potter, is a good kid with a kind heart but often gets carried away in his own feelings. He often gets anger welled up inside of him and lets it out people who have not contributed to it. Sometimes he will wish the worst on people but in the end, he will save their lives even if it means he will risk losing his.

This book hasn't reminded me much of other books I have read, but I think it has inspired many authors to go deeper in the world of fantasy and write books and series involving magic like the magic that is in the Harry Potter books. The book is meant for someone looking for a hard to put down dystopian/fantasy type book.

I liked reading this book and the series, I have read it twice and haven't gotten bored with it. It is an action packed book with almost no flat boring parts. I would highly recommend it to anyone looking for a good fantasy book. The cover shows one of the most important parts of the book and also shows some of Harry Potter's characteristics. I think the cover is almost as good as it can get.
